

Bible Reading Podcast

For several years I have printed and encouraged use of “The Five Day Bible Reading Program” (<https://www.fivedaybiblereading.com/>), and planned some of my preaching around the scheduled readings. This year, as we read through the New Testament, I decided to add another component...

Every Sunday, the week’s five readings are published in audio format (mp3) on our website, available for streaming or download. Each reading is accompanied by “A minute with the word,” a maximum one minute devotional thought that springs from the reading. Several men are involved, so it is not constantly the same voice.

There were three goals for this project — (1) Encourage non-daily-Bible-readers to read, or at least listen, daily; (2) Provide content that can spark deeper consideration of the text, that can be used for private or family devotional time, and that can be easily shared with others, especially non-Christians; and (3) Get other men, especially non-teachers, involved in the work.

After two months, here’s what it looks like — Eight different men have participated or are scheduled to participate in recordings, and hopefully more will join through the year. Several individuals have asked questions or made comments about “A minute with the word,” and at least two families have said they are using it for their family devotional time; I’m not sure how much is being shared with others. Some have commented about listening, because they aren’t “readers.” All considered, I think it’s a worthwhile endeavor.
